

Sinkhole develops on green

By Luke Tatge, M.D.
Mirror Staff Chimney Sweep

Be warned - by the year 2009, Augustana will cease to exist.

Yes, following an increase in moisture in the campus' beloved green, the surrounding buildings will begin to sink into a developing pit of destruction.

Starting with the Humanities building, the Madsen Center and Bergsaker Hall, the demolition will start in May.

The housing office has already begun plans to move residents of Bergsaker to Old Main on April 18.

Classes in the other two buildings will move to the roofs of the Commons and the Mikelsen Library.

English and journalism professor Jeffrey Miller is excited about the change in elevation.

"I think it's really important that our students are closer to God in both the spiritual and physical sense," Miller said.

President Rob Oliver has outlined other building moves in his latest report to the Sinkhole United Council for Kindness (SUCK).

In July, chapel services will be moved to Central Services, art classes will be moved into the basement of Tuve Hall and residents of Solberg Hall will move into various RVs and mobile homes in the Edith Mortensen Center parking lot.

In September, meals will be served at and around the various Burger Time locations in Sioux Falls, and science and math classes will take place in professor Gary Earl's backyard.

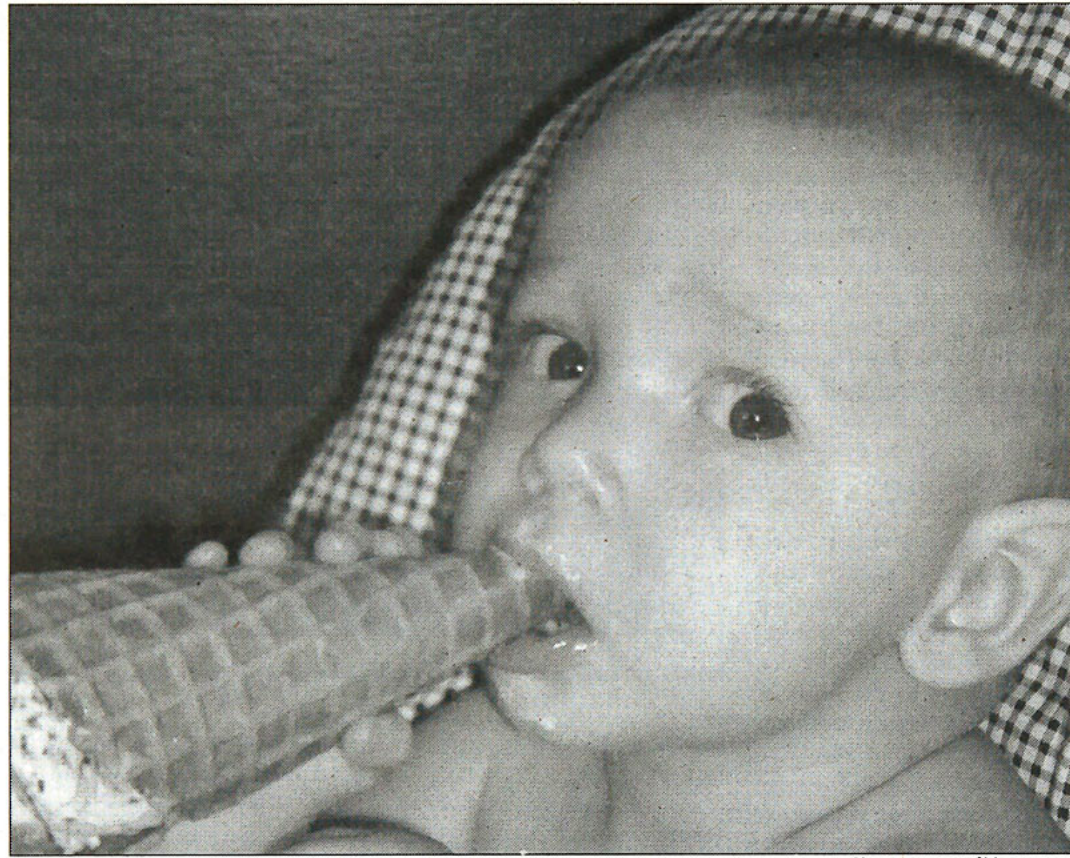

Photo courtesy of blogger.com

The likely mastermind behind the attacks, this adorably evil genius plots his next barrage of cones on Augustana students.

Dairy brings destruction

Boredom incites vicious campus-wide food fights; students fear oncoming onslaught of cantaloupes

By Spencero Ferrelli
Mirror Staff Mob Boss

It is an epidemic. Tension across campus has progressed from small practical jokes to acts of aggression on an exponential level. Strategically placed shaving cream and objects submerged in gelatin have been prime choices for campus-wide pranks, until the stress exploded into an all out flying dairy war.

Eric Arntz, a victim who lives in Bergsaker Hall, said, "It is a growing problem. I feel threatened in my personal space."

Students call it "hucking the cream" or "pitching a cone." Launching the ice cream projectiles has caught on quickly, leading to hostile pretenses among all students.

Freshman Nathan Dehnert said, "For some it's devolved into a dorm versus dorm scenario. It is sad to see such a great environment become so unstable."

So why now? What caused students to succumb to unfriendly urges in these times? One must suspect the troubled times. After a turbulent winter of heavy snow and severe temperatures, a weekly dousing of snow makes students anxious for a real spring free from all unsightly burdens.

With spring break over, students have a road ahead of them full of exams and studying. All the while, a life of freedom mocks them just outside of the window.

"What's coming next? Brownies? Cantaloupes? I do not understand," Arntz said. "I just want it to stop... whoever is doing this is lucky I do not throw well."

Students are encouraged to take the necessary precautions in case of such an emergency. Plastic ponchos are recommended for those who keep their windows open and do not wish to experience the sticky consequences and enzymatic Lactase

See DESTRUCTION, page 8

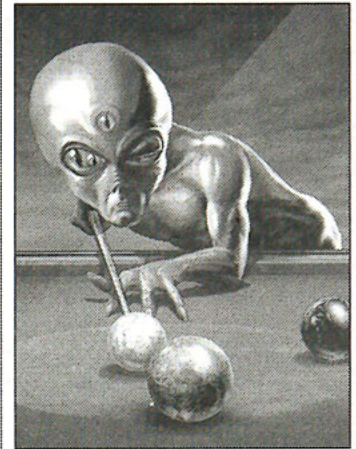

Photo courtesy of wordpress.com

Zortron enjoys a favorite pasttime.

Back Alley pool tourney recruits E.T. and company

By Luke Tatgerooni
Mirror Staff Nincompoop

No, your vision is not deceiving you. That was a little green man walking past you in the Commons.

U.F.O. sightings have increased with the invitation of Martian University to a pool tourney to take place in the Back Alley tonight.

Though all-galaxy champ ALF will not be attending, E.T. - The Extra Terrestrial will be flying his bike in to Sioux Falls for an attempt at the title.

When asked how he thought the tournament would play out, Mr. Terrestrial said simply, "Foam Home," to which we at the Smirror assumes means he lives in a root beer float.

The rebellious natures of our neighbors to the far north have caused Campus Safety officers to be on extra alert.

"We've already had reports of sliming and unwanted brain erasures in Granskou," said director of Campus Safety Rick Tupper.

SIDENOTE: Will the owner of a 2045 two-door space pod please turn off their lights?

Three reasons you should read this issue:

- 1 Men's Club to promote fart jokes. Pages 6
- 2 Demolishing makes way for zorbing. Page 7
- 3 Reality... Page 1

Art professor pegged for film superstardom

By Luke "The Chief" Tatge
Mirror Staff Male

In a move of absolute artistic brilliance, art professor Scott Parsons was chosen to portray legendary rocker Tom Petty in the upcoming biopic Learning to Fly, directed by Oliver Stone.

Parsons was spotted during a casting call at the Empire Mall in which applicants were asked to play "Mary Jane's Last Dance" with wooden spoons in front of Auntie Anne's Pretzels.

Parsons was the standout, as Stone called him "an absolute vision" and "a truly multi-faceted talent."

Though Parsons could not be reached for comment as filming has begun, sources for the Smirror say the fledgling actor will certainly be a Hollywood "heart-breaker."

The film will open in Russia in December 2010.

Scott Parsons

Tom Petty